DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

1. The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

2. Claims 1-10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as failing to comply with the enablement requirement. The claim(s) contains subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention. At least claims 1 and 7 include the limitation that the data storage device can be connected to the I/O port of any type of interface (claim 1) or that the second interface is "any future input/output interface" (claim 7). The specification includes discussion of connecting the device using USB, PCMCIA, and Firewire (IEEE-1394) interfaces. But the disclosure is not enabling for either the use of "any" interface or "any future interface".

3. The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

4. Claims 1-10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

Claim 1 is rejected because it is not clear what is meant by "A set of Universal Storage Interface Bus device" on line 1. Specifically it is not clear how one can have a set of device. It is also not clear what is meant by "the third connector coupling with the second connector, converts the IDE signal and connector of the IDE storage device into USIB signal coming out of the fourth connector, a standard MC-36 connector". How does the third connector convert the IDE signal and connector of the device into USIB signal? This whole section of the claim is very awkwardly worded and difficult to understand.

Claim 1 is also rejected based on lack of positive antecedent basis of "the IDE signal" on line 7, "the data storage device" on line 15, and "the appropriate USIB interface conversion cable" on lines 16-17.

Claims 2-10 are rejected because they depend on claim 1.

Claim 4 is also rejected because it is not clear what is meant by "a UBS interface" on line 2. It appears as though applicant may mean a USB interface.

Conclusion

5. Claims 1-10 would be allowable if rewritten or amended to overcome the rejection(s) under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, set forth in this Office action.

6. The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter: the USIB conversion cable limitations in combination with the other limitations in claim 1 are not shown in the prior art and would not have been obvious.

The reference to Chang (US Pat. No. 6,560,099 B1) appears to have some similarities to applicant's admitted prior art in that the drive unit includes an ASIC for converting signals so that an IDE, USB, Firewire, or PCMCIA interface can be used. Chang however places each of the interfaces on the back of the drive unit enclosure and the user simply selects whether he wants to use an IDE connection or USB connection (as shown in their examples, but the interface could also be at least IEEE-1394 or PCMCIA) and flips a switch to choose the interface and plugs in the appropriate cable. Chang does not show the USB interface conversion board in the interface conversion cable that plugs into a standard MC-36 connector.

Moroz et al (US Pat. No. 5,941,965) shows a universal docking station which uses a single PCMCIA connection to couple a computer with a docking station that connects with multiple peripherals. Moroz shows using a single standardized connector to couple to the disparate devices, however they do not show the limitations claimed by applicant.

Blackborow et al. (US Pat. No. 5,297,067) merely shows hot plugging of a disk drive to a computer.

7. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure as noted above.
